

Careers

Mentors on steroids: How advocates advance your career

By Joel Garfinkle on September 17th, 2012 | Comment on this post

Do you have an advocate at work who is championing your cause? An advocate relationship is like a mentorship on steroids. Instead of remaining out of sight in the background, mentoring you privately, an advocate promotes you in a very public way, increasing your visibility and chances for promotion.

Who needs an advocate?

According to a white paper – “Advocacy vs. Mentoring” by Sylvia Ann Hewlett Associates – people who have advocates are more likely to ask for stretch assignments and raises. They have more doors opened for them and are more satisfied with their rate of career advancement. If that sounds like something you want, then you need to have an advocate – or several advocates – on your side.

Advocates are especially important for women, minorities and anyone else in a group that is at a disadvantage in a predominately straight, white, male working environment. Having an advocate helps level the playing field and open up opportunities that would not otherwise be available in a corporate world where there seems to be a “fast track” to the top of the career ladder for people who fit preconceived notions of what management should look like.

One reason this is true is that your advocates are higher up in the organization than you are and often present at the meetings that determine whether you will be promoted. As you build relationships with these people, they become comfortable with you, and executives like to promote people they feel comfortable with.

How advocates help advance your career

Like mentors, advocates help you expand your vision of what is possible so that you can achieve more. They give you practical advice and suggestions that you can apply to do a better job in your current position and increase your chances of advancing. In addition, they become public spokespeople, promoting you and increasing your visibility whenever they get the chance. Here are some ways advocates can help advance your career:

- They speak up on your behalf. Advocates watch for opportunities to tell others about your accomplishments. They talk about you at meetings and during casual office conversation. This increases your visibility by keeping your name in front of other executives.
- They help you land important projects. They have the influence needed to get you assigned to projects that will help increase your perception and visibility. It’s up to you to put everything you have into making these projects a success, but without an advocate, you might never get the opportunity.
- They introduce you to company leaders. They help you expand your network by introducing you to executives and other colleagues you might not otherwise get a chance to interact with.
- They actively advocate for your next promotion. Wouldn’t it be great if you had someone pulling for you next time you were up for a promotion? That’s what advocates do. And you don’t have to stop at one, either. There is no reason you can’t have several advocates on your side when you’re ready to move to the next stage of your career.

SmartBrief

We read everything. You get what matters.

Sign up today for SmartBrief on Leadership!

Enter your email address

SUBSCRIBE

Click here for a sample of SmartBrief on Leadership »

Browse By Topic

Careers

Events

General Management

Global Perspective

Innovation & Creativity

Inspiring Others

Strategic Management

Archives

October 2012

September 2012

August 2012

More Archives...

Popular Posts

Managing remote employees: Lessons from ancient Rome and beyond by Daniel McCarthy

Build your desired culture with “do” messages by S. Chris Edmonds

25 tips for managing your first direct reports by Daniel McCarthy

A leadership revolution, and why it matters to you by Lead Change Group

Will the GOP’s big party in Tampa, Fla., pay dividends? by Pam Allison

Who We Are

Tweet

0

Share

Are you a rising star with untapped leadership potential? Don't be afraid to ask someone to be your advocate. The answer might very well be, "Yes!" Even if it isn't, you've increased your visibility just by asking.

Joel Garfinkle is the author of "Getting Ahead: Three Steps to Take Your Career to the Next Level." His website has more than 200 leadership articles. As an executive coach, Garfinkle has worked with Wells Fargo Bank, Cisco Systems, Oracle, Deloitte, Amazon, Microsoft, Google, Starbucks, Citibank and The Ritz-Carlton. Subscribe to his executive-coaching newsletter, and you'll receive a free e-book, "41 Proven Strategies to Get Promoted Now!"

Related Posts

- Do women need a mentor to succeed?
- Q-and-A with Mary Davis Holt: The state of women in leadership
- How corporate mentoring can work for your company
- How to disconnect from work and enjoy your vacation
- One simple technique to appear more competent at work

Tags: advocacy, advocates, Joel Garfinkle, leadership, mentor, mentoring, mentorship, sponsorship

Comment on this post
Permalink

Brooke Howell
Small-Business
and Entrepreneurship
Editor

James daSilva
Senior Editor

Mike Figliuolo
SmartBlogs
Contributor

Meet the rest of the team »

Interested in writing for us?

Click here for guest post guidelines

@SBLeaders on Twitter

Live from #NAWBOWBC: Be yourself; it's good for business
<http://t.co/o27Ezm0P> #leadership 12 hours ago

Live from #NAWBOWBC: Why engaging women just makes sense
<http://t.co/5RLPMOcB> #leadership 14 hours ago

The fragile state of talent management
<http://t.co/ukLmFTx5> #recruiting #retention #workforce
17 hours ago

SmartBrief Advisory Board

Leadership Blogs we Like

15inno

Open the door to open innovation with help from Danish strategist and blogger Stefan Lindegaard.

Bret L. Simmons

B-school professor Bret Simmons is a management wonk with plenty to say for himself.

Career Advancement Blog

Joel Garfinkle gives practical advice for advancing up the executive career ladder.

Driving Results Through Culture

S. Chris Edmonds takes a deeper look at how leaders can take a proactive role in culture management.

Fail Spectacularly

Winning isn't everything, and Jason Seiden has built a successful career helping business leaders look on the bright side of failure.

Great Leadership

As leadership-training manager for a Fortune 1000 company, Dan McCarthy brings an HR perspective to executive-level leadership challenges.

Inflexion Advisors

Strategic consultant Mark Stelzner says his HR tips have created $3 billion in tangible results for his clients.

Innovation Management

Applicable advice for leaders who are looking to convert innovation from something your company talks about into something your company does.

InPower Consulting

Dana Theus helps companies unlock the power of their leaders. An expert on talent innovation, she also writes about women's leadership issues at InPower Women.

John Baldoni Blog

Prolific leadership educator and executive coach John Baldoni's columns and posts from around the Web. Usually features concrete, actionable advice for leaders.

Lead Change Group

A posse of business bloggers say they're planning to foment a character-based leadership revolution, and everyone's invited.

Management Excellence

Consultant, executive and business professor Art Petty offers commentary and practical leadership tips.

Mary Jo Asmus

Former Fortune 100 exec Mary Jo Asmus is on a mission to make leaders more purposeful in their work relationships.

People Equation

Jennifer V. Miller leverages her observational skills to provide bosses with insights into their teams' successes and failures.

Scott Eblin's Next Level Blog

Ride along with executive coach Scott Eblin as he roams the country helping managers hone their skills.

Seth Godin

Author Seth Godin offers up crisp commentary on social media, entrepreneurship and marketing.

The Corner Office

Former Silicon Valley CEO Steve Tobak offers an incisive, entertaining take on leadership issues.

The Glass Hammer

Struggling to shatter the glass ceiling? It's hammer time, courtesy of this group blog and niche social network maintained for and by women executives.

The Heart of Innovation

Idea Champions founder and author Mitch Ditkoff offers advice on unlocking your workforce's creative potential.

ThoughtLEADERS

West Point grad and former tank platoon leader Mike Figliuolo earned his business stripes at McKinsey, Fortune 500s, as an entrepreneur and author.

Three Star Leadership

North Carolina leadership coach Wally Bock offers weekly recaps and insights on the best of the business blogosphere and specialist press.